INTERNATIONAL
Pavement Co.
First Mortgage Bonds,
WITH A BONUS OF STOCK.
The pavement made by this Company has met with the highest favor, both in this country and in Europe, and it is considered to approach perfection more nearly than any other.
The Works of the Company are at Providence, R. I., and at Hastings, N. Y., and the needs of its business will soon require additional ones at Chicago and other large cities.
Negotiations are now pending with capitalists in London and Paris for the right to manufacture and use this pavement in those cities.
Few enterprises now on the market promise as profitable business as this one.
The Company require additional means to extend their facilities for manufacturing, and offer for sale the second $100,000 of their 6 per cent bonds (convertible into stock) at par and interest. These bonds carry a bonus of stock, which is fixed for the present at FIFTY PER CENT.

Water Power For Sale.
One of the best water powers in the State of Maine, at the junction of the Penobscot and Piscataquis rivers, two hours run from Bangor, the fall being upon a solid ledge with the right to carry one-third of the water of the Piscataquis through a "Natural canal on the South side, which empties into the Penobscot, one and one-half miles below, through which the river could be turned with insignificant cost." "The land upon the canal is level and but little elevated above high water." "It affords sites for any number of mills, of unsurpassed excellence, and easily and cheaply improved," See what "Wells' Water Power of Maine" says of this, page 318, Howland: "No more favorable opportunity could possibly be offered for tanning on an extensive scale," where the bark can be floated to the mills from both rivers, with a railroad close by. Some two thousand acres of well timbered and tillage land can be had with the power, if desired

THE POTATO BEETLE.

LONDON PURPLE AND PARIS GREEN.

The last few days of warm weather have brought out the potato beetles in force, says the Cultivator. At present there are but few potatoes out of the ground, yet those which are up will be likely to receive a severe attack from the insect enemies. There is but way to brotect the vines, and that is by an application of poison in the shape of either London purple or Paris green. Both these substances are rank poison, on account of the arsenic compounds they contain, and either or both when pure are handled with perfect safety on account of their insolubility.

We have always felt perfectly safe in using Paris green, until the great demand and high price offered to dealers great temptations to adulterate. The danger from adulteration is not that Paris green is mixed with anything more poisonous, but with a poison which is more soluble and thus more dangerous. If you wish to use Paris green, buy that which is the heaviest, or that which occupies the smallest bulk for the weight, and that which honestly sells at the highest price. London purple is much cheaper and much more bulky than Paris green, and hence there are not so many temptations to adulterate it. Again, in buying cheap Paris green the purchaser is apt to buy a large proportion of plaster of Paris or cheap flour in the mixture.

It is most remarkable that, notwithstanding the enormously large quantities of both London purple and Paris green used, yet we are not aware of any serious consequences having attended their use; hence we do not think that farmers have any excuse in not using either one or the other to preserve so valuable and necessary an edible as the potato.

The best method of applying these insect poisons is to mix them with calcined plaster. Obtain a large sheet of stout brown paper, lay this upon the floor, and spread upon it a layer of plaster, then sprinkle over it either the Paris green or the London purple; then take the paper by the two opposite corners, and rub backward and forward till you find that the plaster is slightly tinged. Next obtain a dredge—something in the shape of a wash-basin, with the bottom perforated with small holes; sift the compound upon the leaves till they appear white. This operation should be performed either at sundown or in the early morning, while the dew is upon the foliage.

We generally have two broods of beetles in a season, but last year we had three, and the third left by far the most numerous progeny. The potato tops being nearly dead when the last brood made its appearance, they were not long in destroying what little foilage was left. Farmers in general thought it of little use making any further efforts for their destruction, as the potatoes were out of the way; but those who cultivate the soil must look ahead in their business at least twelve months. It is that last brood which we are now forced to fight, and, unless the severe winter and the cold, backward spring has aided greatly in their destruction, we may expect more of these pests the coming season than during any year in the past.

Hence it becomes all the more necessary that we should be ready to meet these destroyers promptly, for the more we can destroy of the first brood the less of the second crop we shall have to fight, and if we utterly destroy the second crop there will be no third crop to follow. Unless farmers co-operate in the destruction of these insects we may abandon all hopes of ever getting rid of them. It makes but little difference how much care one man may take in destroying them, unless his neighbor seconds his efforts he will find the enemy's rank daily recruited from the fields of his neighbors. Farmers appear to be slow in learning to co-operate in the labors of agriculture, and yet from the very nature of their avocation co-operation is more necessary than in other branches. Unless farmers do associate in measures of extermination of insect pests, legislation may force each man to do his part and thus benefit the whole community.

In the destruction of squash and cucumber bugs as well as potato beetles we have found nothing superior to London purple and Paris green. We have also used the same agents with equal success in destroying the rose bugs, both on rose bushes and grape vines, making application in the same manner as in the case of the potato beetles.

THE LOBSTER BUSINESS. From "The Lobster at Home," an illustrated article by W. H. Bishop, in Scribner for June, we quote the following:

"The factory opens at one end on the wharf, close to the water. Two men bring in the squirming loads on a stretcher and dump the mass into the coppers for boiling. At intervals the covers are hoisted by ropes and pulleys, and dense clouds of steam arise, through which we catch vistas of men, women and children at work. Two men approach the coppers with stretcher and scoop nets, and they throw rapid scoopfuls, done to a scarlet, backward over their shoulders. The scarlet hue is seen in all quarters—on the steaming stretcher, in the great heaps on the tables, in scattered individuals on the floor, in a large pile of shells and refuse seen through the open door, and in an ox-cart load of the same refuse, farther off, which is being taken away for use as a fertilizer. The boiled lobster is separated, on long tables, into his constituent parts. The meat of the many-jointed tail is thrust out with a punch. A functionary called a "cracker" frees that of the claws by a couple of deft cuts with a clever, and the connecting arms are passed to be picked out with a fork by the girls. In another department, the meat is placed in the cans. The first girl puts in roughly a suitable selection of the several parts. The next weighs it, and adds or subtracts enough to complete the exact amount desired (one or two pounds). The next forces down the contents with a stamp invented expressly for the purpose. The next puts on a tin cover with blows of a little hammer. Then a tray is rapidly filled with the cans, and they are carried to the solderers, who seal them tightly except for minute openings in the covers, and put them in another tray, which, by means of a pulley-tackle, is then plunged in bath caldrons, in order that the cans may be boiled till the air is expelled from their contents through the minute openings. Then they are sealed up and are boiled again for several hours, when the process of cooking is complete."

SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1881.

AN ABSURD MISNOMER.

[From the Boston Journal.]

There could not well be any claim more fantastic and absurd than that of Mr. Conkling and his followers to be regarded as "stalwart" Republicans. It is true that Mr. Conkling has often spoken bitterly and sneeringly of men of independent convictions who have declined to be bound by party obligations when, as it seemed to them, the party with which they naturally affiliated was going wrong; but this was when the independent action ran counter to his own schemes and interests, and impeded the operations of the machine of which he was in charge. But Mr. Conkling himself has never scrupled to desert his party when piqued by personal defeat; and it is one of the curiosities of current politics that Mr. Conkling's friends, who are claiming for him the qualities of a stalwart Republican, in the very same breath assure us that the Republican party will be wrecked if Mr. Conkling's ambitions are not gratified. But what does this mean? Simply that the claims of party allegiance rest so lightly upon Mr. Conkling that unless he can have his own way, he and such followers as he can muster will do their utmost to overthrow the party which has so long honored him with its confidence and kept him in public life. Mr. Conkling's friends seem to have no idea that in openly avowing, on behalf of their leader, these purposes of revenge, they are attributing to him anything that is discreditable. If a man, led off perhaps by some honest but impracticable theory, leaves the party for independent action, there are no terms of ridicule and reproach too bitter for them to apply to him. But that Mr. Conkling, disappointed in his endeavor to control Executive appointments, and foiled generally in the attainment of his small ambitions, should turn his hand against the party which has made him what he is, does not seem to them anything that calls for reproof. It shows how clearly Mr. Conkling's principles of action are understood that those who are with him in this contest make these threats to ruin the party if he is defeated, and those who are against him know that nothing but the lack of power to carry them out would prevent their execution.

Mr. Conkling's methods and purposes are clear enough in the light of the last few years. He held aloof from the campaign which resulted in Mr. Hayes' elevation to the Presidency. His friends made no secret of the fact that he would have been content to see a Republican defeat. It was asserted, as something to be proud of, that his indifference or hostility caused the Republicans the loss of New York. During the four years of President Hayes' administration his attitude toward the President was one of undisguised enmity, and he let pass no opportunity of manifesting his feelings. After the nomination of Mr. Garfield, he indicated a purpose to continue his sulking policy. If we accept the explanations of his conduct which his friends are most eager in pressing upon us, it was only after the party prospects had become gloomy in consequence of his apathy that he consented to be "conciliated," and engaged to give his distinguished services to the party in consideration of certain privileges to be enjoyed by him after the election. There is no other Republican leader whom any one thought it requisite to bribe to the performance of his duty. It would be esteemed an insult if the enemies of any other Republican leader should allege concerning him what Mr. Conkling's friends distinctly avow to have been his course. And then, when Mr. Conkling failed to receive as much in purchase of his services as he thought he was entitled to, he threw up his commission as Senator, left his State without representation, and deliberately betrayed his party by giving over the control of the Senate to the opposition. There is nothing in all this which should occasion surprise; it was all perfectly consistent with what was known of Mr. Conkling. But in view of this, that Mr. Conkling, or his friends for him, should arrogate the claim to be considered as "stalwart" is ridiculous. If to be stalwart is to hold self first, the party next, and the country a long way after both, then Mr. Conkling is stalwart, but not otherwise.

MR. CONKLING'S APOLOGY.

[From the N. Y. Tribune.]

Mr. Conkling puts in a plea in his own behalf. He argues his case in a dispatch to a morning paper, which is professedly taken "from his own lips," and which bears evident marks of his authorship. It is a little late for him to go into print as his own advocate, but if his argument were ingenuous it would still be untrue. It is not, though. On the contrary, it is a piece of political pettifogging devised for the purpose of throwing dust in the eyes of the members of the Legislature. He begins by saying that in resigning he "acted from "no mere impulse of the moment, but from "cool and deliberate reflection, sustained "by the advice and counsel of many of the "most prominent Republicans in the party "belonging to this and other States." A few days ago we were told by his nearest friends, fresh from consultations with him, that he resigned from a sudden and generous impulse of comeradeship when he learned that Senator Platt was going to resign. Which statement is the true one? As to his being sustained in his foolish act by the advice and counsel of many prominent Republicans in this and other States, we do not believe a word of it. What prominent Republicans advised him to resign? Let him furnish their names if he can. "He did not come, as has been false- "ly represented," he goes on to say, "to "buttonhole and influence members of the "Legislature, but simply to answer ques- "tions and give advice to such persons as "might call upon him." This is a tale for the marines. For what purpose then did he drag the Vice-President to Albany with him, press the Governor into his service, and work all the levers of the machine, if he only went to the Capital to answer questions and give advice? Could he not answer questions by letter or telegram from Utica? He complains that "the lobby "has been invoked to prevent his re-elec- "tion, and that lies and misrepresentation "have been employed to aid other agencies "to secure his defeat." This might be passed over as the whining of a beaten man under ordinary circumstances, but in view of the fact that the lobby influence at Albany has been in the hands of Mr. Conkling's friends, and that lying of the stiffest character has been done in his behalf, it looks like matchless effrontery. "He will "preserve," he says, "the attitude he has "taken from the beginning—that of being "here without any intention of seeking "support through the use of any personal "influence, and will calmly await what the "better sense of the Republicans decides "upon doing." Does Mr. Conkling think the members of the Legislature are children, that he offers them this dose of cheap and sickening taffy? "In regard to his ob- "jecting to the confirmation of Mr. Rob- "ertson, he holds that he had a perfect "right to do so." Of course he had a right to object. Did anybody say he had not? Was the issue he made with the President on his right to oppose the confirmation of Executive appointments? Does not all the world know that it was on the President's right to make New York appointments against his (Conkling's) wishes? "He "voted against at least forty of Grant's "nominations, and there never was a word "about it." Then why did he not stay in his seat and vote against Garfield's appointments instead of running off to Albany for a "vindication?" "It was reserved for "President Garfield to assert an autocratic "prerogative which no previous President "ever ventured on." This is gross mendacity, not to put too fine a point upon it. President Garfield has asserted no autocratic prerogative. It was Conkling who tried to play the autocrat in Washington and domineer over both President and Senate.

In conclusion the ex-Senator says: "It "is easy for him to perceive the hand of "Mr. Blaine in all that has been done and "is now doing in the manipulation of news- "papers all over the land, and he has little "doubt that the American people will "speedily see the animus which pervades "the whole canvass against him, and visit "their rebuke at the proper time on the "authors of it." Thus Mr. Conkling runs away from his fight against the President, which had at least some semblance of boldness about it, and tries to make people believe that his real antagonist is Mr. Blaine. If what he says were true (and it is not) ordinary shrewdness should have kept him from saying it. A defeat in a quarrel with the President he might have attributed to the power of the National Executive, but a defeat in a personal quarrel with Mr. Blaine, whom he has hated for nearly a score of years, is for him the lowest depth of humiliation. In his anger and desperation Mr. Conkling seems to have lost his common sense and his political sagacity. His position begins to be a pitiful one.

THE NEW YORK SENATORSHIPS.

Conkling Loses Two Votes and Platt One.

RUMORED QUARREL BETWEEN PLATT AND CORNELL.

[Albany Special to Boston Journal, June 2.]

A vote for United States Senator was again taken at noon to-day. There was great excitement, owing to the anticipation that there would be vast changes in the vote of the several candidates. The first ballot was for Mr. Conkling's seat. As was anticipated Mr. Conkling received the same vote that he had yesterday. Some of the minor candidates, notably Evarts and Alvord, dropped out. The only candidate who gained votes was Gov. Cornell. He gained 11 votes, receiving most of them from the friends of Chauncey M Depew, one of the candidates for Mr. Platt's seat. The announcement of Mr. Cornell's gain caused a sensation.

CONKLING LOSES ONE VOTE.

Upon the second ballot for Senator the Conkling men lost one vote. Conkling himself lost this vote, Assemblyman Cowles voting for Cornell instead of Conkling. The act caused a great sensation among the Conkling men, as they had anticipated gains to-day.

A PERCEPTIBLE DRIFT TOWARD CORNELL AND DEPEW.

The second ballot for Senator was taken amid much interest. There was another perceptible drift toward Cornell and Depew as the two Senators. The friends of Congressman Warner Miller deserted him and began to go over to Cornell and Depew. Mr. Conkling's friends in the meantime strove in vain to increase his vote. Chauncey M. Depew for the first time ran past Thomas C. Platt, and Mr. Platt took the third place in the list of candidates. The Legislature then adjourned till to-morrow.

MR. CONKLING GOES TO NEW YORK.

Mr. Roscoe Conkling departed for New York to-night by the night boat, intending it is said, to argue an important law case there to-morrow. Whether he will return to this city or not will depend upon developments in the contest for Senator.

DISSENSIONS AMONG CONKLING MEN.

He had no sooner left the city before there began to be rumors of dissension among the Conkling men. It is well known that the Conkling forces are divided into factions, one devoted to Governor Cornell and the other to Vice President Arthur. These two factions differed as to the policy of further conducting the campaign. The Cornell men favored abandoning Mr. Conkling and substituting Mr. Cornell, saying that it is palpable that Mr. Conkling cannot be elected. They point to the figures of to-day's and yesterday's vote in the Legislature on the United States Senatorship, which are indeed instructive. The vote is as follows:

Names.	Yesterday.	To-day.
Cornell,	21	36
Conkling,	35	33
Depew,	25	30
Platt,	29	28
Wheeler,	22	17
Rogers,	14	15
Lapham,	8	9

CORNELL AND DEPEW.

The Administration men to-day strove to put Cornell ahead of Conkling, and Depew ahead of Platt. It will be seen that they accomplished their purpose. An alliance of the Depew men with the Cornell was foreshadowed as a result of this vote. The Governor is obviously a candidate, although holding back till Mr. Conkling of his own motion retires from the contest. The Governor owes his political elevation to Mr. Conkling, and feel grateful for that service, but he is conscious apparently that Mr. Conkling has not the slightest chance of securing a return to the United States Senate, and therefore thinks that he might rightfully pave the way for his own elevation to that high position.

RUMORED QUARREL BETWEEN PLATT AND CORNELL.

It was rumored about to-night that Mr. Platt, who still remains here, had quarrelled with the Governor. It is represented that one of Mr. Conkling's friends, while in the Executive Chamber to-day, congratulated the Governor upon the large vote, he was receiving in the Legislature. The Governor, it is said, replied that he could not stand being put in the attitude of opposition to Mr. Conkling, although he could to Mr. Platt. A tale-bearer, it is said, carried this remark to Mr. Platt, who, it is said, at once went to the Capitol and asked if the statement was true. The Governor replied that it was. It is reported, thereupon, that Mr. Platt flew out o' the room in a great passion. This rumor is given, although seemingly absurd, because it shows the growing dissension among Mr. Conkling's followers. There may not be many changes to-morrow, but on Saturday it is anticipated there will be vast changes.

THE PROGRAMME.

It is evident to-night that an interview is in progress between the Cornell men and the Depew men. The plan is to give Cornell the long term. In other words, let him displace Mr. Platt, and the short term to Mr. Depew.

CONKLING'S PLANS.

Mr. Conkling before his departure urged his followers to secure an adjournment of the Legislature from to-morrow till Tuesday next. In the meantime it is said Mr. Conkling intends to make a speech in the Academy of Music, New York, attacking the National Administration and giving his reasons for resigning the Senatorship. The Administration men naturally resist taking a recess under such circumstances.

A RECESS TO BE RESISTED.

They also believe that taking a recess might invalidate an election. This they think would be dangerous in view of the Democratic majority in the United States Senate. To-morrow they will earnestly resist taking such a recess. A resolution to this effect they passed at their conference to-night. At the conference they also resolved not to pair off with any one and leave Albany. They will continue to vote for scores of candidates to-morrow, as they have done all the week. They hope, however, to further increase the vote of Cornell and Depew.

REPUDIATING DULUTH.

Proctor Knott's famous speech upon its mushroom grandeur, made Duluth, Minnesota, more notorious than anything else in its history, except, perhaps, its latest effort in devising a rascally method of cheating the holders of its city bonds. This repudiating bantling of a metropolis, thinking to make doubly sure their dishonest evasion of their debt—procured the passage of an act divesting the city of its corporate character, and creating a village out of the city. But one Edward Brewers, of London, owning a large amount of Duluth City Bonds issued in aid of the "Lake Superior Mississippi Railroad Co.," has filed complaint in United States Court, and petitioned that this new way to evade debts may be declared unconstitutional. How have the mighty fallen! Duluth blazed up like a rocket,—and now comes down like the stick.

Ex Secretary Robeson was attacked and robbed of a pocketbook containing valuable papers, in Philadelphia, the other evening. The pickpockets were captured.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Situation in Ireland.

LONDON, June 3. The Times condemns the Government's inactivity in Ireland and says: "We see little hope of any immediate improvement if events are allowed to take their course, if the Land League is permitted to carry on its propagandism in the spirit revealed by Egan's letters and if any attempts to recover rent, or enter upon the possession of land held by defaulting tenants are to be resisted with open, outrageous violence."

The Telegraph says: The Government received such serious news from Ireland during the last few days that a measure calculated to deal with the exceptional state of affairs there is, we believe, engaging the attention of the ministers.

Police Fired on by Concealed Men in Ireland.

DUBLIN, June 3. When the police were returning to Emmis from Bodyke last evening, at Fort Anberg, within two miles of Tula, an armed party lying in wait opened fire on the police from an adjoining wood, fortunately, however, doing no injury. The police returned the fire, but with what effect is not known. A quarter of a mile further on they were again fired on by another party and one of the horses was shot dead. The police made a search through the fields and three men were arrested, but they had no arms. The arrested men were brought up to the petty sessions and remanded. Alarming accounts continue to come in from other parts of the country.

THE WEATHER.

WAR DEP'T, OFFICE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
Washington, D. C., June 4—(1 A. M.)

Indications.

Rainy, followed by clearing weather; Northeast, backing to Northwest winds; stationary or lower temperature, followed by rising barometer.

Cautionary signals from Cape Hatteras to Eastport.

[Special Weather Bulletin.]

WASHINGTON, June 4, 1 A. M.—Rain has generally fallen in Middle States, New England, Lake Region, Virginia and North Carolina. Cold northeasterly storm has prevailed in New England and Middle Atlantic coasts. The temperature is below mean in New England, Middle States Lake Region, Tennessee and Ohio Valley. The warm wave is advancing from the Rocky Mountain region. The indications are that on Sunday in the districts east of the Mississippi river the weather will be cool and fair.

The late Eben Wright spent the last years of his life in devising whimsical plans for distributing the $2,000,000 belonging to him. Six wills, all made since 1877, have been filed for probate in Boston, and as many more will probably be found. The final one, so far, is a will leaving the bulk of the property to Mrs. Charles Whittier, and naturally enough litigation has commenced.

THE READJUSTERS.

MAHONE'S NAME WITHDRAWN

And Cameron Nominated for Governor.

Mahone's Name Withdrawn.

NEW YORK. June 2. The Post's Richmond despatch to-day says that the harmony movement in favor of Riddleberger last night failed, but he may get the nomination.

At the opening of the Convention to-day Wise withdrew Mahone's name and in the ballots which followed Riddleberger has received very few votes and they were accepted by the convention in sulky silence. The convention is quiet this morning. Last night the hall at times was a pandemonium.

Mr. Paul was an absurdly bad chairman and the delegates, many of whom were in the loquacious stages of intoxication, did about as they pleased.

Balloting for a Candidate.

RICHMOND, Va., June 3. In the Readjuster State Convention this morning Capt. Wise, who last night nominated Gen. Mahone, said that he had done so without that gentleman's consent and he now desired to withdraw then nomination. The Convention the proceeded with the third ballot. The result was: Grover, 104; Camerom, 291; Massey, 257; Wise, 88. Whole number of votes 742; necessary to a choice 372.

In this ballot a number of votes were cast for H. H. Riddleberger which were subsequently changed at the instance of that gentleman who thanked the delegates who had complimented him but stated that he was not a candidate.

A resolution was introduced to drop the lowest candidate on each successive ballot and that the candidate so dropped shall not be renominated until one ballot intervenes. This gave rise to an excited debate but was adopted by an overwhelming majority. At this point several delegations favoring the nomination of Gen. Grover asked leave to withdraw for ten minutes for conference. This was granted and business was temporarily suspended.

Votes Transferred.

Upon the return of Grover's friends the balloting was resumed. The fourth ballot showed a steady gain for Massey. Before the vote was announced county Accomac changed its solid vote of twelve from Wise to Cameron. This was received with prolonged applause. Other changes followed.

Later.

RICHMOND, June 3. Amid the great confusion which attended these numerous changes the friends of Massey and Grover asked leave to retire for consultation. No attention was paid this request, but the confusion continued to increase. While it was at its height Mahone appeared before the Convention and proceeded to plead for harmony and begged fair play be shown; that delegations who wished to retire might be allowed to do so, and that the proceedings be suspended during their absence. No further objection being made the Massey and Grover men left the building.

Cameron Nominated for Governor.

Upon their return the Secretary proceeded to call the roll over for changes. When about half the counties had been called it became evident that Cameron's nomination was a fixed fact.

At this point Massey put in an appearance and addressed the convention. He said what he had done for the cause of Readjustment was for the cause of Virginia and her people, and now rather than see his cause jopardized by any dissensions among the representative men of the party, he was willing to sacrifice everything of a personal nature for the further advancement of party interests. His friends, and he hoped they would, as one man, vote to make the nomination of Col. Cameron unanimous. A tremendous outburst of applause greeted this movement, and the question being put was carried with but few dissenting votes.

Other Nominations.

Hon. John F. Lewis ex-United States Senator, was then nominated for Lieut. Governor; Capt. Frank S. Blair, of Wyth County was next nominated for Attorney General by acclamation.

The announcement in the notice, that the steamer "Charles Houghton" brought a large number of excursionists had a familiar look to it.

UNITY HALL SOCIABLE. The Unity Club held a sociable last evening at Unity Hall, which, as the name indicates, was a very pleasant social affair. The evening was quite cool, and the dancing, in consequence, was very enjoyable. While the younger portion of the assembly were revelling in the mazy waltz, a peep into one of the rooms adjoining the hall disclosed to our reporter a group representing the solid men of our city,—men whose heads have been whitened by weighty business cares as well as years,—intently occupied with games of whist. Occasionally the remarks of some one of the number were greeted with laughter that bubbled up with a school-boy freshness, betraying the presence of youthful hearts within their Time bowed frames. Ice cream, chocolate, cake and other refreshments were provided, and the hours sped merrily by. Excellent music was furnished by Messrs. Jones, Howard and Stewart.

THE FLAMES!

FIRE AT WEST GREAT WORKS!

Pearson's Mill Probably Destroyed

OTHER BUILDINGS ENDANGERED

Bangor Steamer and Firemen at the Scene.

At a little past one o'clock this morning a bright red glare shot athwart the sky in a northeasterly direction from this city. Gradually the glow spread until even the streets of our city became bathed in its light. That it was caused by a conflagration was evident, but it was not so easy to decide its locality. About two o'clock the operator at the telephone exchange was informed that Pearson's mill at West Great Works was in flames and that other buildings were in danger. The operator at West Great Works said he should be able to talk but a few minutes, as it was getting too hot for him. Word was sent to Supt. Cram of the E. & N. A. R., stating the need of assistance, and that gentleman, with his accustomed energy and thoughtfulness, notified the Mayor that steamers and firemen were wanted at the scene of the conflagration, and immediately provided a special train to convey them there.

It was nearly three o'clock before all was in readiness, at which time the train started, having on board Chief Engineer Maddocks with a number of firemen, one steamer, a hose carriage and 600 feet of hose, together with a number of interested gentlemen, including Messrs. W. T. and E. C. Pearson and B. B. Thatcher.

Our reporter was at the train, intending to join the party, but great doubts existing as to whether it would be possible to get any news back to the city in time for publication this morning, a rumor prevailing at the time that there was no communication by telephone, it was deemed impracticable to go in person, but arrangements were made with a gentleman who went with the relief party by which the particulars would be furnished if the means of communication could be found. At a quarter past three the sky had resumed a greyish hue, showing that the flames had subsided.

It is to be hoped that the mill has been saved, though it seems hardly possible. It was perhaps the finest mill in New England; the most complete in its appointments, and consequently one of the most valuable. There were four gang saws, four shingle machines, three lath machines, rotary and several other machines. It had a splendid fire apparatus, and a night watchman was constantly on duty.

Our reporter was informed that a very large amount of lumber was at the mill, which, if the mill is burned, will also probably be destroyed.

The mill is owned by W. T. Pearson & Co., and we understand is uninsured.

The company has quite a number of very heavy orders.

The Bangor Stone Ware Co.

In the WHIG of Oct. 9, 1880, appeared a description of the pottery works of the above company. Visiting the works, yesterday, which are located on Parker street, we were convinced that Messrs. Persons & Soderberg, two Swedish gentlemen, had established an industry in our midst that was of greater importance than is generally supposed. These gentlemen are both practical workmen, having learned their trade in Sweden. After coming to this country they worked in some of the leading establishments in Massachusetts, and finely went into business for themselves in this city. They have been quite successful in finding a good demand for their wares, which to a great extent supply the markets of this State and St. John. The demand for flower pots made at these works is great. These pots are made of the finest clay and glazed with the same material, in such a manner that no acids can go through them; they are very cheap and very durable. These are cast in moulds. Jugs are made by hand, and the process is a very interesting one. Our reporter was told that a great many people had visited the works since they went into operation. We do not propose to write an article descriptive of this concern, because this has already been done, but to simply allude to a few facts. The kiln in which the moulded clay is hardened required 73,000 red brick and 17,000 fire brick in its construction. In the last two months some $5000 worth of ware has been manufactured, and of all this amount there is not over $10 worth of refuse or imperfect ware. The clay from which the ware is manufactured comes principally from New Jersey, none being found in New England so well adapted for the purpose.

Ninety-six vessels passed through the E. & N. A. R. drawbridge last month.

A very poetic and touching incident is related of the long storm of week before last. The steamer Cambridge lay over at Rockland during the worst of it, and finally went out, with the weather still threatening. The captain's wife, who lives in Rockland, remarked that she wished a little dove would come and tell her the boat was safe. Just then one of the children ran in, exclaiming, "O, mother, the cat has caught a bird!" Mrs. Ingraham went out, and depriving kitty of her prey, found it was a young dove, which she placed in bed with her little boy. The next morning the bird was all right, and as it flew merrily away, the loving wife declared, "Now I know the Cambridge is safe in Boston."—Rockland Free Press.

MISDIRECTED LETTERS.

How Post Office Officials are Annoyed.

There is probably no other class of public servants who suffer so much in consequence of the negligence and carelessness of others as our post-office officials; they are continually subjected to fault-finding without cause. A person calls at the office, receives a letter for some friend, puts it in his pocket and forgets all about it, and the clerks are blamed; or he directs a letter to No. 11 such a street, but adds a fancy stroke to the left of each figure, so that instead of No. "11" it reads "77," and he wonders why it is that No. 11 did not receive the letter sooner. But the most fruitful source of complaint arises in consequence of misdirected letters. We are informed that, from ten to twenty-five such letters can be picked out every day in the post-office. Some of the superscriptions bear simply the name with no post-office address, as, for instance, "John Smith;" others intended for the city are directed to Boston, or Portland, and in every case the officials are blamed for the non-delivery to the person for whom they were intended. An instance of this kind, which has come to our notice, will serve to illustrate many. A short time since one of our business men entered the post-office and bitterly complained that an envelope directed to the cashier of a bank in this city and containing a check for $5,000, which had been properly mailed, had not been received. He was very positive that it was the fault of the post-office officials; there could have been no mistake in the address, as he wrote it himself and looked at it after it was written. No, there was no mistake on his part; it was entirely owing to the carelessness of the clerks that the cashier to whom it was directed had not received it, and no end of trouble to the sender was the consequence. After a number of days the letter in question was received at the Bangor post-office, having been returned from Portland, when it was discovered that the post-office address was plainly written Portland, instead of Bangor, and there being no request upon the envelope to "return if not called for" in so many days, it remained in the Portland post-office thirty days, as required by law. If our business men would cause to be printed upon their envelopes "return in five (or ten) days" misdirected letters could be returned. Otherwise they must remain in the office for the time specified by law.

Our post-office officials are courteous, obliging, careful and efficient, and the business of this department was never more systematically conducted than at the present time. If a little more care could be exercised by those conducting correspondence, in plainly and properly addressing their letters, there would be little cause for complaint, and the duties of the officials become less onerous.

The Barnum London Consolidation.

Were evidence needed to prove that this extraordinary exhibition, which is to perform here Monday, June 13, it is furnished by the New York Herald of March 29:

The management at Madison Square Garden have redeemed their promise to give the public one of the best arenic exhibitions in connection with a menagerie that ever has been witnessed in New York. Long before the doors were opened they were besieged by anxious hundreds, and at a quarter past eight o'clock there was scarcely a seat to be obtained in the vast edifice. It was stated by one of the proprietors that about 9,000 persons were present, and fully three thousand who could not be accommodated were refused admission. The spectacle can therefore be better imagined than described. Indeed it was worth the price of admission alone to see the immense crowd and note the intense interest exhibited by all classes present, from the representatives of wealth and fashion, who were there in large numbers, to the little arabs to whom a circus is a paradise. The arrangements for the convenience of the audience were in every way complete. Each individual was provided with a chair, so that all crowding was avoided, while an ample supply of ushers promptly and without confusion conducted the holders of tickets to their respective places. Everything was new and clean, from the costumes to the sawdust. No bad flavors disturbed the nostrils; electric lights made the auditorium as bright as day; the ventilation was good and a strong force of police were present to preserve order had their services been required. The only drawback to the performance was that the spectator was compelled to receive more than his money's worth. In other words, that while his head was turned in one direction he felt that he was losing something good in another. Three rings were provided, marked on the programmes as Circle No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3, the equestrianism taking place in the two outer rings, and the central space being reserved more especially for what are technically known as "ground acts." The display began with the usual pageant, in which a vast number of rich dresses and handsome animals were exhibited, after which there was a general introduction of the most notable curiosities, including General Tom Thumb and lady, Chang, the Chinese giant, the bearded woman, the American baby elephant, giant horse, ox, a pair of giraffes broken to harness, and other features. Six common plough oxen were next shown, after which followed the usual performances on horseback, gymnastic and athletic exercises, juggling, wire rope walking, trapeze flying, and other attractions "too numerous to mention." Among the most interesting portions of the performance were the military drill and other feats by twenty trained elephants, the balancing by a Japanese family, and the extraordinary jumping of the group of leapers who ended the programme. The clowns were exceptionally good, and one or two quite original. Altogether the show is an agreeable disappointment and well worth seeing, only, as said before, that ' too much of a maximum is crowded into a minimum.

Information Wanted.

A letter has been received by Mayor Strickland dated "The Cape Dare Co., N. C., May 27th, 1881," in which the writer states that the follow is a copy of a "piece of writing" found in a tightly-corked bottle which was recently picked up in the surf at that place:

"These lines will pain the heart of my mother could she know how the sea is now rolling the vessel, [A few works are here illegible.] the wind blows fretful; the vessel is sinking now off Block Island. We shall be lost if we are not taken off. The ships name is James Furlargue, of Bangor, Me."

It will be seen that the above bears neither date nor signature, but its publication may lead to tidings or some lost vessel. Any person who can furnish information concerning the matter is respectfully requested to do so.

PRAYING FOR RAIN.

We heard a dozen men complain
When, Wednesday, it began to rain;
Just as before when it was dry,
They mourned a drought with many a sigh,
And seemed most strangely to forget
That water generally is wet!
If all men's prayers were heard together,
The world would have the queerest weather.

"My mill stands still!—O, Lord give rain!"
"My grain is down—O, Lord, refrain!"
"My corn is parched!"—"Ah, Susan's bonnet—
"Don't let a drop of water on it;"
"O, not to-day, our washing's out!"
"Roll up, ye clouds! I go for trout!"
"The hen's come off—the brood is drowned!"
"Ah, let it pour! my boat's aground!"

So 'mid the murmurs of the world,
The clouds like banners are unfurled;
The rains descend, the bow is bent,
The sky smiles clear, God's azure tent;
Sweet springs and robins sing together,
And, rain or shine, 'tis pleasant weather;
The sower's hopeful seed is flung;
And harvest songs are always sung.

MAY-TERM REMINISCENCES.

BY AN OLD CANTAB.

[Concluded.]

The "day after to-morrow" came, and with it came a letter for Ned from Carry, informing him that her father had gone off to London on the evening previous, and would probably stay there a fortnight or more. This was welcome news for Ned, who, I am convinced, thought of nothing but the prospective meeting all day, though I kept him hard at work at cricket for some two or three hours on "the Piece."

At last we started, and in half an hour pulled up at our half-way house, which has the head-quarters of the village-feast. We found several "Varsity men" there already, and the usual amount of loutish country yokels escorting their sweethearts with a degree of ease and grace which one might expect a rhinoceros to display in beauing about a young antelope. There was also a large dancing-booth, in which the same personages footed it "on the light fantastic toe" with as much elegance as a newly imported and totally uneducated Polar bear might exhibit in his first trial on hot bricks. However, these simple folks seemed to be enjoying themselves to the full, in their rough, homely manner. And even we, proud aristocrats, did not disdain to take a partner in our country jig on the green outside the booth; as we found that place close and stifling to a degree which our pampered natures were unable to endure. And many were the scowls and ill-favored glances which we received from indignant and jealous John, as he saw his Mary tripping it about with a young college gent.

Then we amused ourselves by sitting with the elderly parties, old farmers quietly smoking their pipes, and by making them drink beer to an extent which they had never experienced before; then as they grew jollier and jollier, we struck up songs with rollicking choruses, to which the company did ample justice.

We "Varsity men" agreed, among ourselves all to leave at once in case there should be any ill-feeling toward us displayed by the already half-tipsy yokels. Having made this prudent agreement, I, by and by, received a signal from Ned; whereup I joined him, and we both left the inn and strolled up the village toward the house which had the distinguished honor of holding the priceless treasure yclept Carry, or, more familiarly, the "Stationer."

We discovered that young lady walking among the shrubberies, and after Ned had formerly introduced me to her, the young couple wandered off together, leaving me to recline and smoke my pipe at my leisure.

I had been lying there some time, when, finding that the grass had become unpleasantly damp, I rose to my feet, and began to take a short promenade, in which exercise I was presently interrupted by no less a person than the gardner, as I soon learnt. He came up to me, and said, somewhat gruffly,

"What be you a-doin' 'ere at this toime o' noight, young man?"

"Who may you be, my friend?" asked I.

"Who be I? I be the gardener; and it be moy bissiness to turn all stragglers off these 'ere grounds."

"Indeed," said I coolly, leaning against a tree as I spoke; "but suppose a straggler doesn't choose to go away for you, eh?"

"I'll foind summun as ull make'm goo."

"Nonsense, my good fellow," said I carelessly, "you know better. Here's half a crown for you; you can go away; and if I find that you've held your tongue, I'll give you half-a-sovereign when I see you again."

"Thankee, sur; you're a gentleman;" and touching his hat, and tipping me a knowing wink as he did so, the gardener went away.

Before long, but not before I was heartily tired of waiting, Master Ned made his appearance, evidently in a high state of happiness; and we retraced our steps to the feast, Ned all the way along launching out into the most rapturous descriptions of the general beauty and perfections of his newly-found inamorata.

As none of Ned's subsequent interviews with his darling Carry were signalized by any mishap or incident worthy of record, I shall pass them over without notice, merely stating that they were frequent and satisfactory. He had now dispensed with my services as a companion on these occasions; and it was, therefore, with some surprise and a deep sense of the honor conferred upon me that I found myself once more asked to accompany Ned on one of his visits of affection. He had received from the "Stationer" an invitation to a large tea-drinking in the open air, in which ceremony she was to assist by presiding over a tray; and as my name was included in the invitation, I consented to go with Ned. Nor shall I readily forgot the calm manner in which he went up and shook hands with her before all the company, and then comfortably seated himself by her side. Everything was done in such an open manner that it was impossible for any one to harbor any suspicion; it was quite natural, people thought, that she should act in a warm and friendly manner toward one who was evidently a near relation. He walked home with her when the proceedings terminated, and then returned to college with me, during the space of half an hour pouring the tale of all his love into my drowsy and not very attentive ear. From what I saw that day I judged that my friend's suit was progressing as favorably as even his most sanguine hopes could have anticipated. I heard very little of his proceedings for some time after, until one day he came to me with a very long face, and informed me that he had got into a hobble from which he wished me to assist him in extricating himself. He then began a dismal story, from which I gathered that he had made an arrangement to travel up to London by train with the young lady; but that, unfortunately, the letter containing the definite announcement of his plans had accidentally fallen, either in whole or in part, into the possession of the housekeeper, who had made the young lady's father acquainted with this pleasant little scheme for traveling, and it had, accordingly, been knocked on the head. He therefore now asked my advice on the subject as to what further steps he should take in the matter. I gave it to him; it briefly amounted to this: "Don't get into hot water about the girl. Leave this traveling scheme alone, and be content to wait till the end of the Long before you see her again, when all this unpleasantness will have blown over." This was very good advice, no doubt; but it was not the kind of advice which an ardent lover was likely to acquiesce in, and it was, therefore, not very surprising that Ned utterly scouted such an idea.

A day or two after, he informed me that he had hit upon another device, in which he required my assistance in order to carry it successfully into execution. He was going, he said, to take a dogcart and pick her up at a place agreed upon between them, then drive to some station a few miles off, so as to put the old people off the scent, and thence book to London. What on earth they were going to do when they got there, he did not explain. He wanted me to accompany him to drive the trap back again to the livery stables.

I was dull in spirts and in want of some excitement, so, strange as it may seem, I agreed to this proposal without much hesitation. The day appointed arrived, and we drove to the trysting-place; but there was no appearance of the young lady—not a vestige of her was to be seen. We waited an hour, two hours, two hours and a half; still no symptoms of the approach of the fair runaway. At last, in despair, we gave the case up as hopeless, and Ned drove back, gloomy and disconsolate.

The next morning, Miss Carry's non-appearance at the rendezvous was satisfactorily explained by a letter from her own hand. Her father had returned suddenly from town, had lectured her severely on levity and impropriety of conduct, and, finally, had insisted on her accompanying him immediately down to Devonshire, whither she would already be on her journey when Ned received her letter. The epistle concluded with a most affectionate farewell, and earnest hopes of a future meeting under more propitious circumstances. She stated that her father was in ignorance of Ned's name, but that he had intimated his intention of making strict inquiries with the view of discovering it. She felt perfectly confident that Ned would trust her not to betray him.

And so the affair ended; for I recommended Ned to go off home at once, and trust to chance for receiving information of his lady love. This time he took my advice, and—would you believe it?—when we met again, after the Long, he positively assured me that there was not left in his heart a trace of the spell which had been thrown over him by the bright eyes and sunny smiles of the "Stationer."

A year flew by and once more it was the May-term—this time for us a May-term of stern and dread importance, for at the close of it loomed gigantic that terrible ordeal through which it is necessary to pass before the eye can be gratified with the sight of those pleasant letters B. A. appended to one's name. For this event Ned and I were both vigorously preparing, having, as is usually the case, spent seven terms in idleness, and then crammed all the reading which should have been the work of three years into the short space of two terms, or even less time than that.

I was one morning sitting in my rooms after breakfast, smoking my early pipe and opening my letters, when Ned made his appearance, as he very often did at that time of the day, for he kept on the next staircase to me. I was engaged in perusing a letter at the moment he entered, so with a brief salutation, "Morning, old fellow!" he sat down and smoked in silence. Having finished the document on which I had been intent, I placed it on the table, threw one leg over the arm of the chair, and turning to Ned, said: "Ned, that rich uncle of mine, whom you have often heard me speak of, has taken it into his head to come and pay a visit to this time-honored and ancient seat of learning. He is bringing his wife with him, and a young lady whose name I can't decipher, an orphan, whom he and my aunt have lately adopted; so I shall expect you to give me your valuable assistance in lionizing them about."

"Only too happy, I'm sure," grunted Ned, without taking his pipe from his lips.

"Well, they'll be here on Wednesday evening; so I shall expect you to come to breakfast at 9 o'clock on Thursday, to be formerly introduced to them."

"All right," was my friend's reply, and the conversation turned upon other topics.

On the Wednesday evening I went to meet them at the station; and there were certain points about my manner of welcoming them, which, to any one acquainted with my ordinary habits and behavior, would have seemed perfectly unaccountable. I had certainly not seen my worthy aunt and uncle for nearly two years; but was there anything in that circumstance to account for the profound astonishment and bewildered gaze with which I greeted them as they stepped from their carriage to the platform! Had any wonderful change taken place in their appearance to afford any clue to the wild confusion in my brain which prompted me to make countless mistakes about the luggage, and even, after most of them had been rectified, to succeed eventually in bringing a wrong box up to the hotel, which I was compelled to send back and exchange for the right one? And after I had left them for the night, what pretext could their arrival give for my sitting in my chair for hours almost, meditating deeply, to the total neglect of my usual evening pipe? Whatever may have been the reasons for such conduct, certain it is that, when I finally rose to retire to bed, they induced me to give way to such a series of chuckles and such friction of the hands, as would have impressed any casual beholder with the conviction that too much reading has unsettled my brain. I hope, reader that I shall be able anon to account to you satisfactorily for these eccentric symptoms, so as at once to banish from your mind any suspicions of mental derangement.

Before the time appointed the following morning Ned was in my rooms, and not long after my guests made their appearance. Then I had to go through the ceremony of introducing them to Mr. Edward Jackson. "Mrs. Crofton, Mr. Jackson." "Mr. Crofton, Mr. Jackson." "Miss Cartwright, Mr. Jackson." O, but you should have seen Ned's face as I introduced him to the last-named person! The astonishment and incredulity, the bewilderment and doubt, depicted on his features and expressed in his blank stare were fine; but finer still was the deep blush which dyed the young lady's cheeks, and sent the blood tingling to the roots of Ned's hair, and the painful confusion with which they bowed to one another. For whom should Ned see before him, but the "Stationer," the lovely Carry, the heroine of so many of his adventures! You can easily guess now, reader, the reason for my strange display of feeling the night before.

I had purposely left my friend in the dark as to the identity of the young lady to whom he was to be introduced, because I wished to see whether his heart had really recovered from the wounds which those bright eyes had before inflicted on it, and whether he really was as callous to her charms as he had asserted himself to be even before three months had elapsed from the time of their separation. I enjoyed their embarassment for a moment, and then set them somewhat at their ease by saying, with a little malice perhaps.

"I think, Miss Cartwright, you and Mr. Jackson have met upon a former occasion, have you not? I beg your pardon for not recollecting the circumstance."

However, they soon recovered their self-possession, lost the feeling of restraint which at first tied them down, and chatted away gaily together.

And this was the "Stationer," the wild heroine of so many reckless escapades! But how changed! How quiet, how sedate, how modest and proper now! And this was no hypocritical mask to deceive her guardians: this change pervaded her whole demeanor, her every action; and one could not help being sensible at once that it was real, there was the ring of true metal about it. Who could have supposed that the wild impetuous girl of a year ago could so soon have toned down into this dear, good, lovable creature? But I was not long before I learnt from my aunt the cause of this alteration. The young lady's father had met with a terrible accident; he had lingered for some time in exquisite agony and had then died. His daughter Carry, his only child, had nursed him with the tenderest care throughout the whole period of his pain and suffering. Him whom in the exuberance of her reckless young spirits she used to detest for his sternness she now learnt to love; for she saw how much deep affection for her had been mingled with that apparent harshness. And the long days and nights which she passed beside that bed of agony brought out all that was tender and womanly in her nature, and softened all that was hard and rebellious, and left her the girl whom my aunt described as the kindest, gentlest, most amiable creature she had ever met.

And she did not give Ned the cold shoulder; she did not cut him because she was ashamed of their former intimacy, but she very briefly showed him that adventure of theirs in its true light, and induced him to confess how foolish and wrong it really was; and then they came tacitly to the agreement, "let bygones be bygones."

So Ned lionized her about; and, I am sure, took much more interest in finding out quaint sights and picturesque views than ever I could have supposed him capable of displaying. And then they began again to venture on the dangerous ground of "old times," until one day (so Ned told me) she took from a pretty little pocket-book a wee piece of silver tissue-paper, on her unfolding which Ned saw a faded rosebud. She held it laughingly up, and said, "You see I still keep this souvenir of my wicked wild days."

How could any one resist such an appeal! Ned could not; and before that rosebud was put back into its tissue paper those two had renewed their troth; no longer the wild escapade of two reckless young scapegraces, but the sober union of two loving hearts.

And now they're married, and I have just paid them a visit: not the first though, by any means, since their wedded life began. And we often laugh and talk and ponder gravely too sometimes, over the adventures of that May-term, when that now happy married couple were so wild and foolish; and a certain yellow and faded rosebud is often taken out and looked at, and as they gaze at it I think grave thoughts are mingled with their merriment; and I doubt not they both breathe a prayer of thankfulness from the bottom of their hearts that the adventure of their foolish days was so suddenly cut short, and that from its interruption has sprung that mellower wisdom which gives them rich promise of a long life of happiness.

Well, these are some of my reminiscences and adventures of a May term; and as I think over them I wonder whether Cantabs ever experience anything of the same sort now. I suppose they do. "There's nothing new under the sun;" and I dare-say my reminiscences will closely resemble those of many now.—London Society.

District of Maine, ss.:—

Upon the application of Levi Greenleaf, of Pittsfield in the County of Somerset and State of Maine, Assignee of William K. Lancey, asking leave to execute a receipt in full of all demands to date against Franklin Smith, and a discharge to one C. N. SALT RHEUM.

Hon. J. H. Snyder, of Saugerties, N. Y., gratefully testifies to the ability of "Favorite Remedy" as exhibited in the case of his little daughter who was covered with Salt Rheum from head to foot. "Favorite Remedy," says this thankful father, "relieved my girl altogether from this fearful affiction, Salt Rheum. This occurred two years ago, and not a sign of the disease has since appeared. What it did for this child it will do for all who use it.

LIVER DISEASE.

Mr. J. H. Northrop, of Lansingburg, N. Y., for several years Captain of the Troy police, says: "I have been for a long time a great sufferer from derangement of the liver, and after using many of the medicines recommended for that complaint, Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is the only one which gave me any relief. I firmly believe that the "Favorite Remedy" is a good, honest preparation; one that may be depended upon."

CHRONIC LIVER DISEASE.

Rev. J. G. Smith, of Hartford, Ct., says: "Being a great sufferer from Chronic Liver Disease and Indigestion, I at last tried your 'Favorite Remedy' and found immediate relief. I used two bottles, which worked wonders in my general system."

KIDNEY-WORT
TRADE MARK

THE ONLY MEDICINE
IN EITHER LIQUID OR DRY FORM
That Acts at the same time on
THE LIVER, THE BOWELS, AND THE KIDNEYS.
WHY ARE WE SICK?

Because we allow these great organs to become clogged or torpid, and poisonous humors are therefore forced into the blood that should be expelled naturally.

KIDNEY-WORT
WILL SURELY CURE
KIDNEY DISEASES,
LIVER COMPLAINTS,
PILES, CONSTIPATION, URINARY DISEASES, FEMALE WEAKNESSES, AND NERVOUS DISORDERS, by causing free action of these organs and restoring their power to throw off disease.

Why suffer Bilious pains and aches!
Why tormented with Piles, Constipation!
Why frightened over disordered Kidneys!
Why endure nervous or sick headaches!

Use KIDNEY-WORT and rejoice in health.

It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans one package of which makes six quarts of medicine. Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for those that cannot readily prepare it.

It acts with equal efficiency in either form.
